To Whom It May Concern:

Those of us trying to live on retirement incomes no longer have available monies to spend on luxuries as the continual rise in costs of the necessities uses up what we receive from Social Security and pensions (for those of us fortunate to have one). Increases in utilities, home, car, and particularly health insurance, food, medical, dental, and transportation (gasoline) costs are rapidly consuming what we at one time could consider as "mad money" for those little "extras" in our retirement years. When will these sharp increases ever slow down or end?
